A SHORT MANUAL OF COMPARATIVE PHILOLOGY FOR CLASSICAL STUDENTS. By P. GILES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Emmanuel College, and Reader in Comparative Philology in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

LATIN POETRY. Lectures delivered in 1893 on the Percy Turnbull Memorial Foundation in the John Hopkins University. By R. Y. TYRRELL, Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo. 7s. net.

CLASSICAL LIBRARY—NEW VOLUMES.

HERODOTUS. The Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Books. With Introduction, Notes, Appendices, Indices, and Maps, by REGINALD WALTER MACAN, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of University College, Oxford, and University Reader in Ancient History. In two volumes. Vol. I. Introduction, Text with Notes. Vol. II. Appendices, Index, Maps. 8vo. 16s. each volume.

'It is a work of real research, and at the same time states all the newest speculations derived from the explorations not only of the text of the author, but of the actual sites which he describes.'—Athenæum.

THE ELDER PLINY'S CHAPTERS ON THE HISTORY OF ART. Translated by K. JEX-BLAKE, Classical Lecturer at Girton College, Cambridge. With Commentary and Historical Introduction by E. SELLERS, Former Student of Girton College, Cambridge, and of the British School at Athens; and additional Notes contributed by Dr. HEINRICH LUDWIG URLICHS. 8vo. [Immediately.]

THE PARNASSUS LIBRARY OF GREEK AND LATIN TEXTS. With Short Introductions but no Notes. Fcap. 8vo.

SOPHOCLES. Edited by R. J. TYRRELL, M.A., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Dublin. [Immediately.]

VIRGIL. Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 6s. net. [Ready.]

HOMER'S ILIAD. Edited by WALTER LEAF, Litt. D. 6s. net. [Ready.]

CATULLUS. Edited by Professor ARTHUR PALMER, Litt. D., LL.D., D.C.L. 3s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

HORACE. Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 5s. net. [Ready.]

'Very elegant and, at the same time, inexpensive and handy little volumes. . . . They are not éditions de luxe, but it is a real pleasure to handle them. . . . The beautiful new "Macmillan Greek" type soon becomes familiar to the eye.'—Speaker.

Q. HORATI FLACCI OPERA. With Notes, by THOMAS ETHELBERT PAGE, M.A., ARTHUR PALMER, Litt. D., and A. S. WILKINS, Litt. D., LL.D. Abridged for use in Schools. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

HANDBOOK TO LATIN AUTHORS. By GEORGE MIDDLETON, M.A., Lecturer in Latin, Aberdeen University, and THOMAS R. MILLS, M.A., Classical Lecturer, Owens College, Manchester, late Lecturer in Greek, Aberdeen University. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

AN INTRODUCTION TO LATIN TEXTUAL EMENDATION, based on the Text of Plautus. By W. M. LINDSAY, Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. Globe 8vo. [Immediately.]

P R E F A C E

THANKS to the kind help of some of my old collaborators for the Classical Review, I am enabled here to present to the reader what I hope will be found a much improved edition of the Supplement to my Classical Guide, the last edition of which appeared in 1885 and is now out of print.

The first portion, containing the list of authors, is almost entirely confined to books published since 1878, books of an earlier date being included in the original Guide (third edition, 1885), copies of which may still be procured from the publishers. It is in the second portion, entitled Helps to the Study of the Classical Authors, that I am most indebted to my friendly helpers, and at their suggestion I have in this portion disregarded the limitation of dates, giving under each head a more or less complete list of the books which were thought most likely to be useful. Here and there the list may perhaps have swollen under the fostering care of experts beyond the modest limits which might have contented an amateur; and in some cases I have stretched a point in order to introduce a favourite author or to bring in the name of an English editor, the latter, as a rule, receiving scant justice in the German bibliographical lists, to which most of us look for guidance in this department. In general, however, I have adhered to my original design of supplying only such information as was likely to be required by a college lecturer or a sixth-form master either for his own use or for the use of his class.

In revising a list like the present, one's attention is naturally drawn to the comparative rate of progress in the different departments of classical study. As far as I am able to judge, the greatest advances have been made in Archæology, Epigraphy, Palæography, and Comparative Philology. As regards Palæography, the change which has taken place in the last twenty years, partly owing to the influence of Westcott and Hort's Greek Testament, amounts to a revolution. Lectures on the subject are now delivered in the Universities; students are sent out to explore foreign libraries, and report upon the MSS. contained in them; photographic facsimiles are multiplied; various readings are given even in the ordinary school editions; while a full account of the MSS. concerned, and some personal acquaintance with the more important among them, are expected in an edition which makes any pretence to completeness. Even more rapid has been the change in Comparative Philology. The list of books which now appears under this head agrees in no single item with my former lists, the authoritative books of a few years ago being now set aside by the experts as erroneous or misleading. This fact affords a striking confirmation of the view put forward by Mr. T. C. Snow in the Classical Review (vol. i. p. 65), that Comparative Philology has not yet reached the stage in which it can be wisely used for purposes of general education.

If however it should be judged expedient for the present to exclude Comparative Philology in its wide sense from the ordinary course of classical education, it does not therefore follow that we must drop the scientific study of language. It is even possible that the latter might be carried on to greater advantage than at present, if, confining our attention to the historical development of the two classical languages, we set ourselves to trace the etymological, syntactical, and lexicographical changes from the earliest period to the latest, through Byzantine Greek, and Patristic and Mediæval Latin, down to the rise of Modern Greek and French and Italian. A beginning might be made at school with such a book as Brachet's Historical Grammar; while at the University the range of the examination would be marked out by setting certain representative books to be prepared by the student. Such a modification of our course would, I believe, have many advantages. To begin with, it would lay a sound foundation for the scientific study of three living languages, thus giving a needed encouragement to the Honour Schools which have been lately started in them. In contrast to the present study of Comparative Philology, which in its earlier stages presents itself to the learner as a mere exercise of memory, seeking to reproduce the ingenious speculations of an authority whose dicta are taken on trust—in contrast to this ipse-dixitism, as Bentham would have called it,—the historical study of language stands out as a type of an inductive science, where each step is plain matter of fact, and the inferences drawn are such as can be tested without difficulty by the learner himself. And what study at once more sobering and more inspiring could be proposed to an undergraduate, who perhaps comes up to the University a little blasé with the old classical drill, than thus to follow the life of a language, watching its rise, its culmination, and its decline, down to its ultimate metamorphosis into a new language and literature ?

Having thus ventured on one suggestion as to our present course of classical education, I am tempted to go further and mention some other modifications which seem to me desirable. It will be generally allowed that the aim of our education should be to equip each of our scholars with such a knowledge of the language as to enable him to read with ease any ordinary Greek or Latin book, to give him a taste for the best literature, a thorough familiarity with a few of the great masterpieces, and a general acquaintance with the history, art, and civilisation of the ancient world. To achieve this, without neglecting the ever more imperious claims of 'modern' subjects, demands the utmost economy of time. The struggle to reach the goal makes it necessary to lay aside all impedimenta which can by any possibility be dispensed with. Some such impedimenta have been already dropped, or are rapidly disappearing. Verse composition is becoming exceptional even in the Sixth Forms of the great Public Schools. Is it treason to suggest that it might be well if the same fate befell prose composition ? Why should we attach so much importance to the latter in scholarship and other examinations ? The intrinsic value of a prose exercise is even less than that of a verse exercise. The latter may often exhibit considerable ingenuity and elegance, and serve pleasantly to while away an idle hour ; but whoever read through a prose exercise except under compulsion ? There are a fair number of boys who find amusement in verse-writing, but there are probably few men who do not look back on the hours spent on their proses as among the dreariest hours of their school life. I do not of course deny that, given an exceptional teacher and an exceptional pupil, Latin Composition, whether in prose or verse, is capable of being made a valuable instrument of education; not only as compelling a boy to make himself thoroughly master of the English which he has to turn into Latin, so as to appreciate the rhetorical force as well as the logical structure of the sentence; but also as training him to recognise correctness and beauty of style as a distinct object to aim at, and supplying a graduated scale of exercises, through which he may be initiated into the pleasant pains of literary composition. But how rare is such an experience as this! In most cases the pupil is left with the dimmest possible conception of what constitutes excellence in style. Even if the teacher is himself a fair composer, it does not always follow that he is able to explain to others the secret of his success. Too often the mint and anise and cummin take the place of the weightier matters of the law: the observance of some pet fancy of the master's, the readiness to reproduce some small trick of expression, some pretty Ovidian affectation, are too easily accepted as the hallmark of a good Latin style. The proper place for composition, it seems to me, is in the lower part of the school, where boys have to be taught prosody by verses and the simpler rules of grammar by prose exercises. In the higher forms I would have such exercises either kept for impositions to punish blunders in scanning or construction, or, if included in the curriculum, they should be included only as alternatives to other work in the case of boys who showed a decided taste for them. In examinations at the University, excepting perhaps those for University scholarships, I think there should be no separate composition papers, but that an opportunity of showing their skill in composition might be afforded to candidates who desired it, by the addition to the translation-papers of short pieces of English to be turned into Greek or Latin prose or verse.¹

It may be objected, 'Are we then to give up the attempt to instil into the minds of schoolboys some idea of the principles of literary composition?' On the contrary, I wish that a rhetorical training, training in the arts of writing and speaking, were more distinctly aimed at in our school course than it is at present. Such training might begin (1) by paying more attention to the practice of learning by heart carefully selected passages—Greek, Latin, and English—marked by some special excellence, the understanding and appreciation of which the master should seek by every means in his power to instil into the minds of his pupils; (2) by insisting more and more, as a boy rises in the school, on the quality of his

¹ Clough's words on this point (vol. i. p. 406) are worthy of attention: 'I had been pretty well sated of distinctions and competitions at school. . . . What I wanted (on going up to Oxford) was to sit down to happy unimpeded prosecution of some new subject or subjects. . . . Surely there were other accomplishments to be mastered besides the composition of Iambics and Ciceronian prose. . . . An infinite lassitude and impatience, which I saw reflected in the faces of others, quickly began to infect me. Quousque Latin prose? Though we should gain by it prizes and honours academical beyond all academical example, it would not the less certainly be a mere shame and waste of strength to make the effort. I did go on for duty's sake, and for discipline and docility, sadly doing Latin prose; but, except in docility, profiting but little.'

English rendering of the Greek or Latin original, so that every lesson should be an exercise in English composition no less than in grammatical construction; (3) by teaching the boys to analyse the speeches of Demosthenes and Cicero, to weigh the force of their arguments and see the reason for their arrangement; (4) by not merely setting English themes, but systematically teaching the art of theme-writing in the Sixth Form, talking over the subject first of all in class, calling out the latent ideas of the boys by questioning, suggesting the natural divisions, carefully criticising the finished essay; and, as a further stage, by pointing out varieties of style, and encouraging that practice of different styles which Stevenson found so useful in his own self-training; (5) by making use of the debating society to a certain extent as a part of the school course. I cannot but think that, if it were found possible, as a result of such training, to impart to each pupil the faculty of expressing himself simply, clearly, forcibly, and rapidly, both in speech and writing, even the most practical of parents and of school-boys might feel that this was an end worth striving for, that in the England of to-day, no less than in the Athens of Aristotle, it was both a disadvantage and a disgrace μη λόγῳ δύνασθαι βοηθεῖν ἑαυτῷ καὶ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ.

Some will perhaps wonder at my attaching so much importance to learning by heart. 'Is not this,' they may ask, 'a relic of the pre-scientific method, which trains the memory at the expense of the finer qualities of the mind?' Nor can I deny that such was to a great extent the effect of the old 'learning of lines,' when this was done without selection, without preparation or explanation, and when the week's order of merit in a class of seventy boys was decided mainly, as I can still remember, by the degree of accuracy shown in the repetition of lines learnt only to be forgotten as soon as said. The unfair advantage given by such a system to a parrot-like memory was undoubtedly most discouraging to boys possessed of slower but more solid qualities. The learning by heart here advocated differs entirely from this, because its foundation is laid in the understanding and the admiration of the pupil, and its result should be to store up in the mind of each boy who has passed through the school some thousands of lines of the noblest poetry, to be to him a life-long possession and enjoyment. Nor does it need any straining of the memory to effect this. The daily task may consist of a very few lines of new matter. The great point is that what is once gained should never be lost, that it should be forthcoming at a moment's notice in whatever part of the school.

Among impedimenta I am also disposed to reckon critical and grammatical papers, where the object is to test a boy's knowledge of exceptional forms or uses or of the various attempted explanations of the more notorious loci desperati. Puzzles of this sort, being naturally limited in amount and also liable to the fluctuations of scholastic fashion, lend themselves easily to cram and form a most unsatisfactory test of the real mastery of a language. In saying this, I am very far from deprecating the serious study of grammar. I would have such a book as Roby's Grammar or Goodwin's Moods and Tenses regularly read in the higher forms, the examples being translated and the explanations discussed with the master in school; nor do

I see any objection to examining in the work so done, provided that the object is not to place the candidates in a scholarship examination, but simply to test the attention and the memory of the pupil, and his power of understanding grammatical principles.

Again, I cannot help thinking that there is a tendency among classical teachers in the present day to lay too much stress on minutiae of spelling and pronunciation. It is all very well for professed philologists to spend their lives in ascertaining the exact truth with regard to even the minutest points which may serve to illustrate the action of the human mind in the building up of language. But it can never be too strongly insisted upon that the end of classical education, and its sole justification, is not to turn out philologists, but to train men. To dwell on these externals is the mere ritualism of scholarship. Doubtless it is much to be desired that the scholars of different countries should come to an understanding as to the pronunciation which should be used in our schools, because this would facilitate the use of Latin as a medium of communication among them. It is probable too that such authorised pronunciation would approach to what was generally believed to be the pronunciation of classical times; but whether it did so or not, whether it actually phonographed the speech of Augustus or were as far removed from it as our speech now is from that of Shakespeare, would make not the slightest difference as to the real value and use of classical education.

If I have not yet exhausted the patience of my readers, I should like to suggest one or two other ways of facilitating the attainment of the main ends of classical education as previously defined. Every teacher must feel it both disappointing and humiliating, that in so many cases the prolonged study of Latin and Greek seems to leave so very little trace behind. How small a proportion of the boys who have passed through a Public School continue to read the Classics with pleasure afterwards! In ten years' time how many are unable to make out the meaning of a simple sentence in either language! I believe this partly arises from the fact that boys are so little accustomed to translate at sight, at any rate in the lower forms of schools. It seems to me that this should be done in form from the very commencement. A boy's work out of school, in the lower forms, should not be the preparation of a future lesson—except in the way of learning off by heart what has been already fully explained,—but the recording of his recollections of the last lesson. I cannot but think that the schoolboy's proverbial dislike of books arises in great measure from the unfair burden which has been laid upon him in the early stages of Latin, when he was expected to find his way unassisted through a long sentence of Caesar. Independent work may come very well after he has been well drilled in unseen translation by the master in form; but even to the end of his school course I would retain the practice of the latter as a most important part of classical training. A boy is thus taught how to tackle without flurry or confusion any passage that is set before him, having a confident expectation that he will be able to make out its meaning by following the method in which he has been practised by his masters. It is much to be desired that in the University Local Examinations, College Matriculations, and the like, unseen translation should be substituted in place of set books, which constantly interfere injuriously with the school course, and are liable to be slavishly got up by learning off translations. If thought necessary, the use of dictionaries might be allowed in Junior Examinations.

Much has been done of late years to make classical study more attractive and interesting by improved school-books, and by the pains which the masters take to prepare their class for any new subject by means of careful introductory lectures. Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, Sidgwick's and Page's editions, are very different from the Schrevelius and the scanty Latin notes which were all the schoolboy had to help him some fifty or sixty years ago. Even at Rugby, I remember, in the days of Arnold and of Tait, learning off the rules and examples in the Latin Grammar without any idea of their meaning, and being set to construe my first Greek Play without a word to explain how such a portent had come into existence. Such a state of things is, I hope, now impossible in any school: it may however not be out of place that I should repeat here the words I used in the Preface to the first edition of my Guide, where I had occasion to speak of the beneficial use of translations: 'A Greek Play often fails to be appreciated because the successive readings in it come at such intervals that there is an absence of continuous interest, and the separate passages are never viewed together as forming one complete work of art. In the same way Homer, Thucydides, Tacitus, not to mention the longer treatises of Plato and Aristotle, are known to the majority, even of those who have shown themselves promising scholars at school or college, only by the reading of a few isolated books.' It would be a great help to the appreciation and enjoyment of a play, say of Aeschylus or Aristophanes, if a verse translation of the whole were read to the class by the master, either as a preliminary or a sequel to going through it in Greek. Homer and Virgil, portions of Herodotus and select Lives of Plutarch, should be familiar to every boy in the school by means of translations, read as holiday tasks or otherwise, before they were confronted with the originals in form. Those who had made a beginning, say of Thucydides or of Plato's Republic, in their school work, should be encouraged to supplement this for themselves by finishing the book in Jowett's translations. Above all, the Modern Division should receive some tincture of classical training through translations of the poets and orators and philosophers of Greece and Rome. I think people far too much underrate the influence of translations. When we consider that (to give an outside estimate) not more than one-hundredth part of the influence of the Bible comes to Western Christendom straight from the original, ninety-nine hundredths at the least passing through the channel either of the Vulgate or of some modern translation, I think we need not despair of the Modern Side in our schools as beyond the reach of culture, even of Greek culture, because of their ignorance of the Greek language. Nor should it be forgotten that the most splendid verses ever written in praise of Homer were called forth, not by the remembrance of the original Greek, but by the rude translation of Chapman.

But while it should certainly be the object of the teacher to keep alive in his pupils the sense of the unity which connects together the parts of a great poem or other work of art, there may be a danger, on the other hand, of attaching a superstitious importance to a mere factitious unity, such as exists between the different Odes which are joined together in one book of Horace. The time at the disposal of the classical teacher in the present day is too short to allow of its being wasted on second-rate literature. When the pupil is sufficiently advanced to profit by it, he should learn nothing but what is of first-rate excellence in its own line. As Maurice has well said¹: 'Only the best books, only those which carry a kind of authority with them, should be set before boys. When they have been drilled by them into habits of deference and humility, then they . . . will have acquired the true discerning spirit, that spirit of which the judging spirit is the counterfeit; the one perceiving the real quality of the food which is offered, the other setting up its own partial and immature tastes and aversions, as the standard of what is good and evil.' Applying this test to the study of Horace, we feel at once that a large proportion of his writings does carry this authority with it. The patriotic odes generally, and especially such a line as Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori, are of a kind to stir the blood of an English schoolboy at any age; and as he rises in the school he begins to appreciate the mitis sapientia of the Epistles; but his admirable cant-word 'rot' shows the good-humoured contempt of a healthy instinct for nine-tenths of the love-poetry, not of Horace only, but of the Roman poets in general; not to speak of his disgust for the occasional outbreaks of Zolaesque brutality. Why should we mete out to the ancients severer measure than we do to the moderns? There is no rule that compels us to read every word of Wordsworth or Byron, or even of Shakespeare. Surely it is an impiety to obtrude on the eyes of the young either the stupidities or the frailties of the mighty dead. For my part, I should wish that all Latin poets, except Virgil, should be studied by school-boys, and still more by school-girls, only in selections agreed to by the masters of the Public Schools.

There is one point in which I think that Classical Education has sometimes suffered from a mistaken conscientiousness on the part of teachers in these latter days. Their anxiety to improve to the utmost every moment of school life has, if I am not mistaken, led to an injurious curtailment of the precious hours of leisure which were granted to their more advanced pupils by the older headmasters. The object of all school training being to prepare a boy to use aright the freedom of manhood, there should surely be a gradual emancipation in action, thought, and study, as he shows himself worthy of it. By the time he has completed his seventeenth year, a Sixth Form boy of ordinary sense and intelligence should be capable of more than simply imbibing from others and doing what he is told to do: he should be encouraged, within certain limits, to follow his own tastes and carry out his own studies under the general supervision of the master. With this end in view he might be excused a portion of the regular school work, he might be left to prepare some of the fixed subjects of the yearly examination by himself out of school, as well as to make his choice of extra subjects to be got up at his own pleasure; and beyond all this he ought to have a certain margin of time secured to him, free from school games, school business, and all magisterial interference, to be used or wasted as he liked best.

One more suggestion and I have done. The study of ancient Art, and of Roman and Greek Antiquities generally, has been greatly facilitated of late years by the multiplication of excellent illustrations, by lectures and museums, and by the establishment of the British School at Athens. It is to be hoped that a residence in the last may before long be regarded as a natural part of higher classical training. There is something, however, to which I look forward with even more eagerness, and that is the throwing open of the British Museum for the purpose of systematic lecturing, which must follow when once London has obtained a genuine teaching University of its own, in place of the simulacrum which now obstructs the way.

Teachers who read these remarks will, I hope, pardon the garrulity of an old teacher, whose opinions have been formed in the course of a tolerably long experience as schoolmaster and college lecturer. I have thought it well to print them here, because the work to which I propose to devote the years that remain to me is unconnected with theories of education, and I am not likely to have another opportunity of stating what to me seem to be truths needful and seasonable for the present time, though it is likely enough that to some of my readers what is true in them may seem not new, what is new not true.

To turn now to other matters :—The sources which have been chiefly used in drawing up the lists which follow are—a MS. list of the best books in Classics and Comparative Philology drawn up some years ago by Mr. W. M. Lindsay for his own use, which he was kind enough to lend to me ; the volumes of the Classical Review, especially the bibliographical lists ; the quarterly Bibliotheca Philologica

Classica, published by Calvary, Berlin; S. Reinach's Manuel de Philologie Classique, d'après le Triennium Philologicum de W. Freund, 2 vols., Paris, 1880-84; E. Hübner's Bibliographie der Klassischen Alterthumswissenschaft, ed. 2, 1889; W. S. Sonnenschein's Best Books, ed. 2, 1891, and Guide to Contemporary Literature, 1895; and the lists of various publishers, both English and Foreign. Preuss's edition of Engelmann's Bibliotheca Scriptorum Classicorum, published in 1880-81, and the other bibliographical works mentioned in the Preface to my original Guide, were of no use for the period covered by this Supplement.

I need not dwell on the tedious and ungrateful labour of drawing up such a list as follows, the difficulty of determining what to omit and what to include, and whether an asterisk should be given or withheld. If it were not that I had received many testimonies to the usefulness of the former editions, and felt myself under a certain obligation to bring the book up to date, and to make it—I will not say, perfect, for there can be no perfection about a rough-and-ready handbook of the kind, but—a little less imperfect than it was before, I should certainly never have had the courage to set to work with a new Supplement, or the patience to go through with it. One great encouragement I have had, and that is the ready help which has been extended to me by the scholars, some of them not personally known to me, to whom the sheets were sent either for general or partial revision. To all my hearty thanks are due, but especially to Professors Max Bonnet of Montpellier and J. H. Wright of Harvard; to Sir E. Maunde Thompson, and Messrs. Kenyon, Cecil Smith, Walters, and Wroth of the British Museum ; to the Provost of Oriel, the Master of Christ's, the Editor of the Classical Review, Dr. H. J. Roby, Dr. J. E. Sandys, Professor E. C. Clark, Professor Burnet, Messrs. A. M. Cook, W. CLASSICAL AND SCRIPTURE AUTHORS IN DANTE.

STUDIES IN DANTE. First Series. By EDWARD MOORE, D.D.,
Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford.

'The book is one of the most important contributions that has yet been made to the growing literature devoted to the interpretation of the great poet of the Middle Ages.'—Scotsman.

Now ready, with Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE TRAGIC DRAMA OF THE GREEKS. By A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late
Fellow of Hertford. Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham College, Oxford.

HOMERI OPERA ET RELIQUIAE.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF HOMER. By D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Oxford.

'A beautiful edition which should delight the heart of the lover of Homer.'—Scotsman.

'This single volume comprises the Greek text of the whole works of Homer, including the collected fragments, printed in beautiful type well worthy of the famous Clarendon Press.'—Morning Post.

Demy 8vo, buckram, 8s. 6d. net.

THE MODES OF ANCIENT GREEK MUSIC. By D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Oxford, Honorary Doctor of Letters in the University of Dublin, Author of 'A Grammar of the Homeric Dialect.'

8vo, with Maps and Plans, cloth, 12s.

SELECTIONS FROM STRABO. With an Introduction on Strabo's Life and Works by the Rev. H. F. TOZER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Honorary Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, Author of 'The Islands of the Aegean,' etc.

It is hoped that the passages which are here brought together may be of service in illustrating, as by a series of vignettes, some of the less familiar features of ancient history, and in opening to view here and there a wider field of study than is contained in the more familiar classical authors.

'There is a good introduction on the life and work of Strabo, useful notes, and excellent maps and plans. The book ought to be valuable to many students, and highly interesting to casual readers who have not forgotten their Greek, and who do not care to wade through the entire works of Strabo.'—Saturday Review.

LATIN HISTORICAL INSCRIPTIONS, illustrating the History of the Early Empire. By G. MCN. RUSHFORTH, M.A., St. John's College, Oxford.

'It is the ideal book to place in the hands of students while they are attending a course of lectures about the period with which it deals, and listening to a more literary exposition of the topics for which it supplies the most useful materials.'—Athenæum.

NEW VOLUME OF JEBB'S SOPHOCLES.

'It is needless at this time of day to review Professor Jebb's Sophocles, of which we have now before us the fourth and fifth volumes. The book has taken its place; it is the standard authority on Sophocles, and a marvel of literary finish and complete exposition.'—Guardian.

'In welcoming the sixth volume of Professor Jebb's great critical work on Sophocles, it is idle to expatiate on the qualities which distinguish it, for they are known to all scholars. If the Greek scholarship of England is able in this generation to "speak with its enemies in the gate," there are few men who will have a larger share of the credit for this achievement than the editor of "Sophocles," with his fine taste and sober judgment, his full but discriminating knowledge, his detailed thoroughness of work, his unrivalled instinct for the subtleties of Greek expression, and his luminous and forcible exposition.'—Classical Review.

SOPHOCLES.—THE PLAYS AND FRAGMENTS, with Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo.

HOMER'S ODYSSEY. The text edited in accordance with modern criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. Cloth, 4s. 6d. Strongly half-bound, 6s.

HOMER'S ILIAD. By the same Editor. Crown 8vo. Cloth, 4s. 6d. Strongly half-bound, 6s.

PITT PRESS SERIES, New Volumes.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. Edited by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s. 6d.

'A scholarly piece of work, . . . The introduction, while giving all the information conventionally appearing in such compositions, gives a good deal more in an unusually entertaining way. . . . The notes are copious and full of instruction; the student who faithfully works through them should increase greatly his knowledge of Greek.'—Glasgow Herald.

EURIPIDES.—ORESTES. Edited, with Introduction, Notes and Metrical Appendix, by N. WEDD, M.A. 4s. 6d.

'Marked by fine scholarship and acuteness of judgment, and is to be classed with the best school editions of single plays that have been published in England.'—Educational Times.

THUCYDIDES.—BOOK III. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. W. SPRATT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge. 5s.

'At last an editor has proved himself capable of doing for Thucydides what it was once hoped that Richard Shilleto would do, namely, produce a thoroughly satisfactory and permanent edition.'—Athenæum.

HORACE.—ODES AND EPODES. Edited by J. GOW, Litt.D., late Fellow of Trinity College. In one volume 5s.; also in separate parts. Books I. and III., 2s. each. Books II. and IV., 1s. 6d. each. Epodes, 1s. 6d.

'Most admirable little books by a first-rate scholar and schoolmaster. The notes are brief, clear, accurate, and are just what would be wanted by any ordinary student of Horace. There can, to our thinking, be no question about the satisfactory character of Dr. Gow's work.'—Guardian.

LUCAN.—DE BELLO CIVILI, BOOK VII. (The Battle of Pharsalia). Edited by J. P. POSTGATE, Litt.D., Fellow of Trinity College. 2s.

TACITUS.—HISTORIES, BOOK I. Edited by G. A. DAVIES, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College. 2s. 6d.
